Scene 1

Artemisia's painting studio in Naples, 1649. Enter Artemisia and her assistant, Tommaso. She is 51, well-dressed, self-controlled, occasionally imperious, occasionally flirtatious. She is losing her sight, which slowly becomes clear throughout the performance. Artemisia is dictating a letter to Don Antonio Ruffo, her new patron. Artemisia and Tomasso discuss their work, her importance as an artist and how things will be with their new patron, and finally Artemisia sings an aria about the creation of ART, and the two sing a duet to finish.

Strains of Che si può fare? by Barbra Strozzi, at the opening through the instrumental writing, setting the scene.directly into Scene 2

Scene 2

The canvass Susanna and the Elders emerges from it Susanna sings about her garden "the hum of the bess and and the winds delicate caress"
She is rudely interrupted by two old men watching her and then threatening to attack her.

The Elders harass and continue to threaten Susanna, then Artemisia becomes the Inquisitor, and interrogates Tassi (Elder 1) about the rape. The Elders (Tassi and Cosimo) lie about Susanna, and Artemisia implores her not to worry, and insisting that their lies will come out in the end.
When Artemisia asks Susanna (who is now "young Artemisia") to recount the events of that day, she recounts that terrible day and the events that followed. After describing how Tassi attacked her, and treated her after, Artemisia interrupts the scene in horror, remembering her pain, screaming "Enough" (of Susanna today!), and "I must rest my eyes"

Scene 3

The Oculist comes to examine Artemisia, during which he explains that she is losing her sight.
Tomasso joins in a short trio which reprises the material from the Aria about making ART.
After she sings "What can be done" (Che si può fare?)

Scene 4

Artemisia's painting studio in Naples, Artemisia and her assistant, Tommaso is once again taking dictation for a letter to her patron Don Ruffo. She sings "you have been of great comfort to me."

The oculist comes to take her for surgery. And she says goodbye to Tomasso. After he walks to the canvass she's been working on and turns it towards the audience, and we all discover that it is blank.
